Interesting Account of the History of a

Weak Men and Weak Women.

Men and women both suffer from weakness and loss of strength. Women, however, suffer more than men. Men don't have those bearing down pains, the bane of a weak woman's existence. Both, however, have their dizzy spelis, both bemoun their loss of appetite, their lack of energy, that feeling of weariness and constant fatigue. Both become languid, insipid, and life to either hardly seems worth living. Their kidneys are weak and seem wasting away. Their livers are inactive, their stomachs disordered, their bowels irregular. Oh! foolish, foolish men and women! why will you not seek the way to health and strength. Others as miserable as yourselves are now in the full enjoyment of happy, joyous life, simply because they put prejudices aside and began a use of that excellent alterative known as Dr. John Bull's Sursaparilla. Ask your neighbors who have used it what they think about it. Ask your druggist for a bottle, and don't take any other. Soldier is dead. There was an air of sadness at the nion Depot and in the offices along Union avenue as the above word passed among the officials. Who was the soidier who had so many friends? It was not "the soldier" nor "a soldier," but plain "Soldier," and he was only a dog. a little black fellow who had for years been a familiar character around the depot. Everybody was his friend, not only for his own sake, but on account of the history of his eventful life, which could he but have been able to talk would have added an interesting page to Western history. One day some eleven years ago an old soldier got off an east-bound train. He had been wounded, and was on his way home on a furlough, but was taken sick here and sent to a hospital, where he only lived two or three days. With him when he arrived here was a little black dog, which he said had been his constant companion on the plains, and as he was in General Terry's command when they went, or were supposed to have gone, to brave Custer's relief at the time of the Little B g Horn slaughter, the canine passed all through that remarkable campaign.

When the man was taken to the hospital the dog remained at the depot, and for days wandered over the tracks, under the cars and up and down Union avenue hunting for his master, who before this had gone to await the final bugle call. At last he located in the Union Pacific ticket opposite the main entrance to the depot, and from that t me on was a fixture with the overland people. Mr. T. A. Shaw, the ticket agent took him under his especial charge, and after a time the dog, which had been christened "Soldier," was taken to Mr. Shaw's home, where he soon became a great pet with the family.

"Soldier" evidently appreciated his new home as he made it his headquarters from that time until his death, which occurred from old age. For several years, no matter what the weather, "Soldier" would go down to the Union This seems a paradox, but it is explained by one of New York's richest men. "I don't count my wealth in dollars," he said. "What are all my Depot, where he would make the rounds of the building and also the offices along the avenue, then he would return to Mr. Shaw's home for the day. He possessions to me, since I am a victime of consumption? My doctor tells me was stolen once and taken to Denver, but escaped from his captor, and after months of absence, turned up foot-sore and almost exhausted. Not long after he again disappeared and was not seen for over a year, when one day he crawled into the Union Pacific office more dead than alive. He was taken home, and the ladies nursed him for several weeks until he recovered. After that exploit "Soldier" lived a quiet life until his death. - Kansas City Times.
